

Intelligent Presentations

The art and science of crafting more interactive and flexible presentations

RICK ALTMAN

Has it ever happened to you? You are giving an important presentation and nearing your dramatic and powerful close...when a member of your audience asks a question...which leads to two questions...and then a complete tangent...and before you know it, you have five minutes left and 20 minutes of slides to blast through, just so you can get to your dramatic and powerful close. At times like that, your slides confine you, they don't help you. This session looks at an under-utilized set of tools designed to help you break free of the linear way most of us think of PowerPoint. Topics to include:

- Basic hyperlinking
- Actions, Triggers, and Inserted Objects
- Who's running the show? You are...
- PowerPoint as operating system

This session is for accomplished PowerPoint users who need to wield more control over their presentations. While there will be new material, it is similar in scope and structure to the session of the same name presented in 2008.
